

TAKE A STAND p. 90 and 91

This famous picture was taken in during the Olympic Games in City. There are three men on the podium after the 200m : the American Tommie Smith, the Australian Peter Norman and another John Carlos. These athletes took a stand to protest against the civil rights in the U.S.A.

When the American national began, they raised their in a Black Power salute and bowed their on the podium. The clenched fist is a reference to the Black Power movement. They wore black socks to denounce black The Human Rights Badge is a way to fight against Tommie Smith and John Carlos had to face terrible consequences: the crowd started jeering, they were from the sport. Later, they were tracked by the FBI and they even received death threats.

Peter Norman was also heavily criticised upon his return to Australia. He was and never returned to the sport. The Australian government didn't apologize for the treatment that Norman received until 2012, years after his death.

TAKE A STAND p. 90 and 91

This famous picture was taken in during the Olympic Games in City. There are three men on the podium after the 200m : the American Tommie Smith, the Australian Peter Norman and another John Carlos. These athletes took a stand to protest against the civil rights in the U.S.A.

When the American national began, they raised their in a Black Power salute and bowed their on the podium. The clenched fist is a reference to the Black Power movement. They wore black socks to denounce black The Human Rights Badge is a way to fight against Tommie Smith and John Carlos had to face terrible consequences: the crowd started jeering, they were from the sport. Later, they were tracked by the FBI and they even received death threats.

Peter Norman was also heavily criticised upon his return to Australia. He was and never returned to the sport. The Australian government didn't apologize for the treatment that Norman received until 2012, years after his death.